PLAN TO RELIEVE CRUSH ON BRIDGE

Comptroller Metz sprung a brand new scheme to relieve the Bridge crush on the Brooklyn, Williamsburg and Manhattan bridges at the meeting of the noon. It was figured out by John B. McDonald, who built the present subway, and it contemplates a gigantic loop far underground in Manhattan and Brooklyn and running over the Manhattan and Williamsburg bridges. The Brooklyn Bridge is not touched by the scheme, the supposition being that it will divert an immense amount of trave from the old structure.

Mr. McDonald submitted plans show ing that the loop could be constructed

The southern terminus of the loop, if it is constructed, will be at Broad and Pearl streets. It will extend from that point up Pearl and Nassau/streets, running far under the present Subway, and Centre street and Park Row, and continuing up Centre street to Canal, where there will be a branchoff to the Manhattun Bridge, forming the south branch of the loop.

The other branch will continue up Centre street to Dianoey, across Delancey street and the Williamsburg Bridge, there to dive underground agan, running through Broadway, Bedford avenue and Lafayette avenue to Flatbush avenue and back under Fatbush avenue to the Williamsburg Bridge, connecting with the main loop again at Canal and Centre streets.

It is likely that the Rapid-Transit Commission will approve this scheme. Mr. McDonald is said to have expressed a willingness to build the subway and organize a company to operate it. He believes that the operating company will be able to make a satisfactory transfer arrangement with beas the Magistrate Finn Wanted Hogan Held for Assault, but the Trautmans Were Convinced of His Mental Irresponsibility.

DOCTOR'S WIFE CHEERED ON LEAVING COURT, MAN HISSED.

Two Officials of the Y. M. C. A. Testify That Hogan Assured Them He Had Lost His Money in the Association's Rooms-Accuser Sure Only Money Gone.

Mrs. Jeanne Davis Trautman, who entered Jefferson Market Court to-day charged with the larceny of $13, came forth again two hours later on the arm of her husband, Dr. Alexander Trautman, smiling with satisfaction over her complete vindication and bowing graciously in response to the shouts of a big, approving crowd. The beautiful Southern wife of the rich German physician had just been honorably discharged by Magistrate Finn.

The weird-looking little man, Peter J. Hogan, who had seized Mrs. Trautman in Broadway on Christmas Eve, crying out that she was the pickpocket that had robbed him, slipped quietly out of a back door of the Court-House, in shaking fear of a mob, and fled away, pursued by hisses. His story had been completely upset, he had been branded as an intellectual freak and only the forbearance of his victim's husband had saved him from prosecution for assault.

So ended a four-days' sensation, the chief result of which had been the development of the amazing fact that any woman, no matter how high her station or how pure her name, may be arrested, dragged to a station-house and locked up in a dirty cell on the mere unsupported word of any half-demented stranger.

The story of Hogan convinced most of the spectators that he was mentally unbalanced. But despite some incoherent answers, he insisted in his identification of Mrs. Trautman, holding to his original declaration that she was the woman who picked his pockets on Fifth avenue Saturday night. On cross-examination a dozen fatal flaws developed in his narrative. Magistrate Finn denounced as ridiculous the claim of Hogan that his money had been taken from a folding purse while the purse was still in his pocket. It was proven that on Sunday night Hogan visited two branches of the Y. M. C. A., and in each told a story of having lost his money on the premises. At neither place did he say that he had been
